

INTENSE INTEREST IN PRIMARY TODAY

Friends of All the Candidates Are Working Hard—Count May Take Some Time

Intense interest is being manifested in the democratic primary election which is being held all over Madison county today.

The race for Sheriff between Elmer Deatherage and Van Gerton seems to be attracting most attention and the friends of each are "working their heads off" for their favorites.

The contest between G. B. Angel and J. D. Goodloe for County Judge is also very keen, with the races for the other offices attracting less interest.

Here in town chief interest centers in the Mayor's race with four entrants, present Mayor L. P. Evans, W. E. Blanton, Jeff D. Mitchell and Robert Golden. All have their friends and many predict a close finish between the four.

There is also much interest in town in the councilman races and friends of the candidates are rallying to their standards.

The polls opened at six o'clock and soon crowds were gathering at each voting place. The polls close promptly at four o'clock. It is expected that it may be six or seven o'clock before the complete result is known in the county races, if at all close, as several of the country voting places are some distance from telephones. The city results should be known within an hour of the time the polls close.

Primaries All Over State

The 1921 political fortunes of between 6,000 and 7,000 Kentuckians today hung in the balance with partisans of the major political factions of the state battling a decision.

At 6 o'clock this morning polls opened in every precinct in the state and men and women of the democratic and republican parties expressed their preference for candidates to carry the party standards in the biennial fall campaign. The polls will close at 4 o'clock this afternoon and before midnight the choice of candidates for state senator, representative, circuit judges and county, town and city officials should be known in virtually every district in the state, except perhaps the more isolated sections.

While local fights are of interest to the voters of the town, city and county, the battles which will attract the most attention generally are those for circuit judge, senator and representative. These latter offices are what are known as state offices, candidates in districts having more than one county filing declarations and expense accounts with the Secretary of State at Frankfort.

The state is divided into 100 districts for the choice of members of the House of Representatives; 38 for the choice of state senators, and 36 judicial districts. The even numbered senatorial districts today are choosing nominees, the odd numbered districts not electing until 1923. Nominations are being made in every representative and judicial district.

In the race for circuit judgeships, a number of candidates have taken advantage of the non-partisan judiciary law allowing candidates to file for the nominations on both republican and democratic tickets. In 23 districts, however, nomination on one or the other of the major tickets is equivalent to election. In nine districts the democrats have left an open field to the republican nominee and in fourteen no republican has offered. In one district—the 21st—the republican incumbent is the only candidate filing and he has offered on both tickets. In two divisions of the Jefferson circuit court the incumbents, W. H. Field and Thomas R. Gordon, have offered on both tickets without opposition.

Miss Edith Hunter, of West Virginia, is a guest of relatives in the county.
